CS.97 People think about participating in elections differently. Some consider participation to be a civic DUTY and think that they should participate in all types of elections, no matter how much they sympathize with the parties and candidates. For others, participation in elections is RIGHT. These people believe that they do not always have to go to the polls and that they can decide on their turn based on how they sympathize with the parties and the candidates. [CSES, D18., PRIMARY ELECTORAL DISTRICT]

CSES NOTES: This item should indicate the respondent's primary electoral district.

Wherever possible, this variable should use official district identification numbers. The goal of this variable, wherever possible, is to identify electoral constituencies, the definition of which is "the smallest unit for which there is representation to the national parliament." In other words, the point at which votes are translated into seats.
